CONSTIPATION—CAUSE AND CURE
THERE is not among the whole catalogue of chronic diseases, one concerning which every section of the United States, and called [illegible]

What is this material stimulus or excitor of action of the lungs?

Their contents—the fecal matter, and the mucus which may be found in some of the 6 ounces in weight before it can become excretor of the contraction of the bowels. I reason then, why no evacuation takes place—why the stools are irregular, is because there is so few fecal matter there to excite them; and if we expel the fecal matter, we must expect also, and of course if there is much fecal matter to be expelled, nothing can be expelled. Fecal matter cannot be sent out of the bowels, because it is too thick, heavy, and bulky, and it is not fecal matter, but because they have no organs to discharge.

I said there was nothing, no fecal matter; there may be a small quantity, not such as any one from his bulk or weight could expel. The 6 ounces in weight of 6 ounces may present in the bowels, their muscular coats will just so certainly, by the right of their contents, be stimulated and red into contraction and the expelling of its contents as the womb will, at the end

At this point I will take occasion to remark, that under this view of the cause of irregularity of the bowels one can very readily see how perfectly ridiculous and unavailing, and entirely useless is the administration of gative medicines in Constipation. You cureative or laxative medicines and for

Why then expel from the bowels that which is not there—to force them to contract when there is nothing to expel. Purgative medicines in Constipation are not only useless, but very injurious, as we shall see, in this administration is the height of conceit. Let the bowels alone until the medicine arrives for their evacuation, or until they need to be evacuated and restored their strength for their functions without the help of any drugs. Let them alone, and when the stools shall have accumulated to the amount of six or six ounces they will most certainly contract upon and expel their contents.

The next question in order is—What is not local matter present—why has ing is not from mother's breast—only has not been with more regularity and with a frequency deposited, so as to become an irritator to contraction of the bowels and the consequent expulsion of their contents?

For the reason, that as the fibres are a true retention from the blood, and the patient from lean, pink, lantern-jawed appearance has very plainly that he has but very little inside of him, and what there is, of the same nature, is almost and almost entirely gone. It is very easy to imagine that there will not be much fecal secretion; it is an impossibility that there should be much, for the blood is nature out of which the fecal secretions can be manufactured are ready to manufacture, but they are short of material, they have nothing to work with, no material to work with fecal matter. Like the cotton factory, where everything is ready to do the work, all the machinery is ready, the steam is ready and ready for action, but the spin is missing—it is not to be had, and cannot be had, and the consequence is no cotton is made, so, as there is nothing to make it out of, the machinery is idle, and the consequence is, they are ready to manufacture and cannot make the fecal secretion, but good rich blood, and a plenty of it being wanting, they are left without any material to work with, and of course, not having this quality, they are not able to manufacture.
